MR. FERGUSON'S LIQUOR POLICY

An article in Thursday's Christian Guardian, the official organ of the Methodist Church, is going to cause considerable amount of comment in this campaign. The article says:

"Mr. Ferguson, if he does sympathize with the present prohibitory law, has been very successful in hiding that sympathy, and he has been repeatedly upon party platforms when prominent members of his own party declared their dislike of the O.T.A. and its enforcement, and he has never once rebuked them, so far as we know, nor even dared to differ with them on this matter. It is true that Mr. Ferguson promised to communicate policy upon this matter, but he has thus far failed to do so, and, rightly or wrongly, the impression has been created upon the public that the Leader of the Conservative party in Ontario is not in sympathy either with the O.T.A. or its enforcement.

"If this impression is incorrect, we shall only be too delighted to correct it, but until there is some definite lead given to the contrary the temperance Conservative of Ontario cannot but hesitate to vote for the Conservative Leader, and any Conservative candidate will need to make his prohibition views very clear indeed before he can expect prohibitionist Conservatives to vote for him.

"We see no blinking the fact that the Hon. Mr. Ferguson's temperance policy, or want of policy, is not acceptable to the temperance electorate of Ontario. If he is seeking to corral the liquor vote for the Conservative party he may keep quiet upon this issue, but the day is past when temperance voters can be expected to follow a Leader who dare not take a stand upon prohibition."

The Christian Guardian, in two additional paragraphs, points out that both the Liberal Party and U.F. stand squarely for the enforcement of the O.T.A.

ADDRESS AND PRESENTATION.

At the regular monthly meeting of the Maple Leaf Institute, on April 26th, at the home of Mrs. Wesley Cummings, Big Creek, the following address was read to Mrs. J. B. Miller, Jr., and by Mrs. Arthur Curle and the presentation made by Mrs. W. Smith.

Dear Mrs. Miller,

We, the members of the Maple Leaf Institute, were very sorry to hear of your departure from our midst, early in the year. We thought we would not let you go unless without showing in some tangible way, our appreciation of your good and noble work in our midst, during these years we have been organized and were always a valued and faithful member, more during the time of your presidentship, our Institute has been an inspiration to each and every member, through your kind words of cheer, and each meeting a decided education for all of us, whom attended. Although our society has had its trials and losses and drawbacks, by us all pulling our shoulders to the wheel and sticking together and, with a will in which, "Do it" is our motto, for home and country," we have passed through that period and came out triumphant. But we feel that you will know of the sacrifice it has been on your part to get out to the meetings, since you were left a widow, we know it has been no easy matter for you, but we feel it has been a comfort and a blessing to you to have been identified with the Institute in that respect. Each meeting has been made very interesting by you, so it made us all feel so that we could not be one of them. We could easily count on one hand the number of meetings Mrs. Miller has not been with us.

Mrs. Miller we feel it will be a very difficult task to replace the vacant spot in our Institute which will be left by your genial and pleasant smile is not welcomed by all our members, in looking at your place in our meetings. But in those beautiful words which read thus, "the best of friends must part," so it has come to our society to lose one of our very best members. We now ask you to please accept this electric reading lamp, as a slight token of our appreciation of your noble work in our society. We ask you to have a warm spot in your heart and a kind thought for the members of the Institute, as you mingle with your new associates, and when you are sitting by its light in your new home in Napanee, may it recall to you the happy remembrance of your many friends in the Maple Leaf Institute, and may God in His goodness bless you with health and strength until your work is finished here below.

Signed on behalf of the Maple Leaf Institute.

Mrs. Miller, taken completely by surprise, replied in a very feeling manner, her regret on leaving our midst. "Blest Be The Tie That Binds" was then sung heartily by all. The business of the meeting was then proceeded with.

The estimated cost is $1,000,000. The two Canadian railroads are planning exhibits on adjoining sites, each with a floor space of 10,000 feet. The cost of the Canadian Pacific exhibit is estimated at $300,000.

The Canadian Pacific steamship "Empress of Russia," upon her last sailing, carried a shipment of Canadian frogs for Japan. Cool space was reserved in the hold of the liner and the frogmen were well packed in ice. On being taken ashore at Yokohama these frogs will be gradually warmed until they are ready to be let loose, when they will be liberated on the lawns of Japanese importers, with the idea of giving the Japanese a new industry in the production of frogs legs.

The Canadian Pacific Telegraphs have announced the following reduced rates per word for cable messages to the following countries effective to-day:—Austria, 30 cents, Belgium 23 cents, France 22 cents, Germany 30 cents, Great Britain and Ireland 20 cents, Greece 35 cents, Hungary 33 cents, Italy 26 cents, Spain 33 cents, Switzerland 27 cents. The 25 cent per word rate to Great Britain and Ireland is still in effect for special rush cables. Corresponding reductions have been made in the rates to other countries in Europe and beyond via Atlantic cables, and the new deferred rates will be one-half of the full rates quoted above except to Great Britain and Ireland, where the existing deferred rate of 9 cents per word is unaltered.

PRINTERS' ERRORS.

They Often Are the Cause of Strange Statements.

"Printers' errors" are no new thing; but it is inevitable that, while printing lasts, there must always be amusing, and sometimes serious, mistakes.

We know all about that gallant colonel, the "bottle-scarred veteran," of a famous misprint, who, naturally annoyed at this imputation on his sobriety, received an apology, only to be worse off than before.

"Of course," said the offending journal, "when, by an unfortunate error we referred to him as a 'bottle-scarred' veteran, it must have been evident that what we intended was 'battle-scared'."

A curious printers' error was that in the Cambridge Chronicle, where a paper read before a local society on "Rings under the Eaves of Old Houses," in connection with fire-prevention, was printed, "Rings under the Ears of Old Louses." This error is still to be found in the files.

"Write clearly" is an injunction rarely followed.

The author who, with crabbed calligraphy, wrote of "zigzag" staircases had only himself to blame when they appeared as "21st-99" staircases.

In a recent issue of a very serious magazine, which contained an article on a famous public man, the latter is made to say:—"What I meant by allusion as to the heads of them asses" should have been "the masses," of course.

Not long ago, Sir Alfred Mond was the victim of one of these typographical errors. It is well known that he is of the Jewish race. A report of a speech he had made represented him to have said that "the ills from which we suffer will not abate until the nation returns to pork. The porkers should be made to understand this truth."

It is understood that great excitement prevailed in certain circles until it was explained that this disastrous statement was the result of an unfortunate double misprint.

The reference was, of course, to the national need of "getting back to "work," not "pork," and it was the workers, and not the pigs, who were to be made to comprehend the necessity.

A Neater Crimson Gulch.

"What did you do with the bunch of roughs who came over from Beurcentopolis and said they was going to clean up the town?"

"They had it their own way," answered Cactus Joe. "We gave 'em brooms and scrapers, and organized a posse to see that they made good."—Washington Star.

Silver and Evil Spirits.

In witchcraft lore silver seems to have been credited with great power to disperse evil spirits. In an old work on the subject one reads of a "valiant Souldier who had skill in Necromancy," and who always used "silver bullets to shoot away the witches." The evidences of such superstition are brought directly to the modern eye through the discovery made by a Pennsylvania farmer. A dealer in curios purchased recently an old powder horn from his farmhouse sale. From its appearance the weapon antedates the revolution. It was in a deplorable state of rust, and in cleaning it the new owner discovered that it was loaded. He carefully withdrew the charge and to his surprise found instead of two bullets two silver shillings, dated 1781, tightly wadded with leaves of a Bible of ancient print. Beneath the coins were a small lock of hair and a piece of paper containing an illegible quotation. The gunpowder was coarse and undoubtedly of colonial manufacture. The whole looks very much like a charmed charge, calculated to demolish some weird lady of the broomstick.

Making Bad Diamonds Good.

A diamond that has a yellowish luster is of no great value. Stones of the first quality are perfectly white, with brilliant flashing lights of red, green, and blue.

Until recently yellow stones were difficult to sell, for nobody wanted them. To-day, however, they have a chance of coming into their own, for it has been discovered that their color can be changed by means of a new process.

The diamond under treatment is placed over a small hole in a block of lead. Rays from a tube containing radium are directed into this hole, and slowly a change takes place. The lifeless discolored stone loses its jaundiced tinge, and gradually takes on a wondrous flashing green hue not unlike that of the emerald.

Sometimes the cure is worked quickly, often it takes a year or more; but in the end the stone is transformed into a glorious thing of beauty.

WITH LOVERS OF FLOWERS

TUBEROUS-ROOTED BEGONIA FORMS SUITABLE PLANT FOR COLOR EFFECT.

(Written for the Canadian Horticultural Council by George Simpson.)

Gardeners are often perplexed when confronted with the problem of finding suitable material for planting the bed or border on the north side of the house, and the difficulty is intensified if that northern exposure fronts the street. There are a number of possible treatments, but if good color effect is desired no flower better fits the situation than the tuberous-rooted begonia. It delights in a moist atmosphere and partial shade, and, if the soil conditions are right, it will thrive amazingly and provide continuous and ever-increasing bloom until hard frost lays low all tender plants in late autumn.

FOLIAGE AND STATURE.

The begonia has so many good points to its credit that we can overlook its one short coming, and that is lack of stature for use for foundation planting; but this difficulty can be largely overcome by providing it with a background of cannas, ferns, low growing shrubs, like the Japanese barberry, or any other plant of suitable foliage effect that does not object to moderate shade. The begonia is especially well suited to a bed that gets shade from a large tree during a portion of the day; but the bed must be sufficiently removed from the tree to be beyond reach of hungry surface roots, especially those of the elm. The narrow space between city houses, where the majority of plants pine away for lack of sunshine, provides a congenial home for the begonia.

STARTING THE TUBERS.

Tuberous-rooted begonias can be raised from early sown seed, but this is a delicate operation, requiring expert skill and special facilities. The ordinary amateur would be better advised to procure the tubers, either dormant or sprouted, in the spring and having once acquired his stock, he is equipped not only for the current season, but for all time as the tubers can be lifted in the fall, stored and used again each succeeding year.

HOW TO DO IT.

Having obtained a stock of dormant tubers, the first thing to do is to get them started into growth. About the middle of March is the time to begin, but the initial operation can be commenced at any time until the middle of April, the only difference being that the blooming stage will be reached a little later. Take a box about 6 inches high, 15 inches wide and two feet eight inches long, technically called a "flat"—an old fish box with the salt thoroughly soaked out will do—bore a couple of holes in the bottom for drainage, cover the holes with pieces of broken pots and fill the box to within half an inch of the top with sand or very light porous soil. Insert the tubers closely in rows, allowing the top or crown of the tuber to project above the surface, water and place the box in any room in the house where the temperature is 65 degrees. Do not allow the flat to dry out but do not over water. A piece of newspaper, or other light covering placed over the box will give shade if the plants are at a sunny window and will also prevent excessive evaporation.

TRANSPLANTING AND GROWING ON.

When the tubers have been well sprouted—stems about an inch in height—they may be transferred to other flats or 4-inch pots filled with a light porous compost consisting of good fibrous loam, leaf mold and a little sand and provided with sufficient drainage to keep the soil aerated and sweet. When the days become warm in May, the plants can be set in the cold frame—every garden should have one—and grown on until planting time in June. It is necessary to ventilate the frame on warm, sunny days, to promote sturdy growth and prevent the foliage from scorching. Do not put out in the open ground before the first week in June.

SOIL AND CULTIVATION.

Careful attention should be given to the soil in which the plants are to be set. Good fibrous loam with an admixture of leaf mold and well rotted manure is suitable, but if the soil is at all stiff it should be lightened by the addition of some coarse sand. Fresh manure should not be used as a fertilizer and if well rotted stable manure is not available, a perfect substitute will be found in the pulverized sheep manure that florists sell. Take the plants out of the pots or boxes with the least possible disturbance to the soil adhering to the roots, set them firmly 15 inches apart and water. Cultivate once a week during the growing season and give water when the surface of the soil begins to dry out. Never water begonias while the sun is directly on them because if you do the foliage will be scorched. It is not always necessary to stake the plants, but if the soil is rich and the season moist, they will make rampant growth and become floppy unless given some slight, inconspicuous support. Filling-up helps to support them.

STORING THE TUBERS.

The begonia, although a tender succulent plant, luxuriates in cool moist conditions and will give its best bloom in September. If, sometimes happens that an early frost will descend upon the garden, but if the bed is covered with light cloth, such as an old awning, or even newspaper, the danger point will be passed and the begonias will go on blooming gaily for three weeks or even a month. When the first hard killing frost come it is time to lift and store the tubers. Loosen the plants with a digging fork, lift them out with the hand without severing the stem from the tuber, set them in a flat and place the flat in a cool, airy situation under cover until the stems dry and the tubers have ripened. When thoroughly dry rub off the stems, pack the tubers in sand or cocoanut fibre and store for the winter in a temperature of about 50 degrees.

SPRING BLOM.

For bedding the single begonias are more effective. In addition to white, there is a considerable range of color including yellow, pink, rose and red, in several shades. Unless provision has been made for early bloom the border will remain flowerless until the middle of June. To avoid this, plant the ground with early tulips or daffodils the previous autumn. If the polyanthus plants, grown from seed the previous summer are set out in the fall or early spring—preferable in spring to minimize the risky winter killing in a northern exposure—a glorious show of early color will be provided; when the polyanthus has finished blooming it can be lifted, divided and retired to the nursery bed for the summer.

Murderesses a Big Problem

Two women are under sentence of death in Canada, and in England recently a woman was hanged for murder, though hers was not the hand that struck the actual blow that sent her husband into the hereafter. These facts have caused a general discussion in the United States concerning women and capital punishment, a discussion that is stimulated because of the fact that murderesses appear to be on the increase. There can be little doubt of it. There can be little doubt that more women murder men than men murder women, and it is difficult to resist the conclusion that this is so because murderesses have less reason to fear the consequences of their act than murderers. It might be argued that women are more emotional than men, more likely to be momentarily deranged by passion, but the fact is that as often as not the murderesses commit the crime only after long reflection, and in some cases have thought in advance how best to cover up their tracks. The most sensational crime of the moment in New York was undoubtedly committed by a woman, a man being the victim, and though suspicion points strongly to the murderess it appears that she has an even chance of never being brought to trial.

In every country where capital punishment exists women are supposed to have no exemption, but as a matter of practice they have one. It is believed this is due to the fact that the juries are composed of men. Now that women are being admitted to juries it is suggested that the problem should be solved by having women jurors try all cases in which women are accused. It is the universal custom of lawyers when opinion has been sought that women juries would have no more compunction in finding women guilty of murder than men have of finding murderers guilty. In the Thompson-Bywaters case in England, one woman sat on the jury, and in addressing compliments the jurors said that he doubted if any but a British jury would have had the courage and moral fortitude to have found the verdict of guilty. The ease with which American murderesses escape is proverbial. Henry Watterson used to declare it a national scandal. He asserted that the trial of a murderess was a mere formality if she happened to be handsome, and if her victim happened to have a rather immoral character could be blackened. Nevertheless, a short time ago, in Los Angeles, a Mrs. Clara Phillips was convicted of murdering another woman. She was convicted by a mixed jury, and there was little difficulty in arriving at a verdict.

Despite a general immunity for murderesses, the few students who have examined woman's relationship to crime agree that she is more indifferent and callous than the male criminal. This is the opinion of Hargrave Adam, the British authority, and Granier, in his book "La Femme Criminelle," recalls the fact that in the year 378 B.C. a terrific epidemic swept through the ranks of Roman husbands. Men of prominence also appeared in large numbers and nobody seemed to know the cause. The mystery was laid bare when a disgruntled maid said that her mistress had poisoned her husband. This led to a thorough investigation, which revealed hundreds of supposedly most respectable matrons as murderesses. Out of the first batch of them tried 166 were convicted. Speaking of the infanticide and the viriol thrower Granier says:

"She will not plead weakness. Deception is her privilege, but she is not willing to concede an equal right to others. Any one who condemns the Utopian idea of equality as simple and childish and who thinks that justice will be found in margin standards, progress in differentiation, should pray for the creation of woman juries to pronounce the verdict where the charge is against a woman alone. This reform would fulfill to perfection the original conception of the institution—the judgment of the accused by a jury of his peers. The male jury more and more refuses to distribute punishments equally between the sexes."

It seems to be generally believed that in almost any country a referendum would pronounce against capital punishment, and if this is so we might reasonably expect more women would be against it than men. In the United States, the fact that women escape the death penalty is not the chief grievance of those who believe that murderesses are becoming too common. The real menace is that women escape with long or no punishment. In the United States a life sentence, if imposed on a woman with any influence, may mean anything from eighteen months to four years.

A New Alloy.

A young French chemist named Mazarin has invented a new alloy resembling gold and it has been termed "areum." It has the brightness, durability and inoxidability of gold, which qualities will permit its substitution in jewelry and other manufactures where gold is likely used. THE DIVINE SARAH.

Many Picturesque Stories Surround French Actress.

"There are," remarked Mark Twain, "five kind of actresses — bad actresses, fair actresses, good actresses, great actresses, and—Sarah Bernhardt!"

That, or something like it, is what the world has been saying for over half a century. She has become a tradition, not a woman—a tradition for all that is inspired in dramatic genius, all that is whimsical and wilful in dramatic temperament.

At the age of fifteen—a minor actress whose education was as good as her figure was thin—she was expelled from the Comedie Francaise for slapping the leading lady across the face. Within a few years she had earned the power to slap anyone she chose whenever it might seem good to her. Metaphorically speaking, she has been exercising that privilege with great enthusiasm ever since. Of her very failings she made qualities to endear her to the world. Incidentally, it pays. The net proceeds of one tour in America are said to have been one million dollars. Above all, it produces supreme genius.

"Sarah Bernhardt," Sir Herbert Tree is reported to have said, "is the greatest woman I have ever known."

Of her private life we are told that she is extremely hot tempered and lovable; has a keen eye for the main chance, but is almost foolishly charitable in an emotional way. As regards the exact details there appears to be some difficulty. A few years ago there arose an irate gentleman of Rochester, Iowa, to claim her as his aunt, a certain Sadie King, of Canadian parentage. Sadie, it appears, delighted everyone with her Shakespearian readings, stabbed her lover, and disappeared.

Perhaps he is right. The Divine Sarah seems quite capable of doing that, or any other little thing which might appear to her desirable, but it is impossible to withhold one's sympathy from her when one learns that Mr. King has decided not to attend any of her performances. He wrote to her, as his aunt, and she didn't answer him. Whereupon he arose in his dignity, and cut her dead.

There is this much to be said of the King theory. Sarah's parents appear to have been of a slightly reprehensible character. It seems fairly certain that her mother was a Jewess of Dutch extraction. Her father is usually described as a well-to-do Jewish merchant of Antwerp; but she is a rather hazy figure. Where Mme. Bernhardt was in Russia, where they don't like Jews, we are told that he was changed into a Roman Catholic Frenchman of good family. Strangely enough, her son, Maurice, appears to labor under a similar difficulty, although his mother married in 1881, an actor, Jacques Damala. Maurice completed the family party by marrying Princess Therese Jobionowski, reputed the natural daughter of King Victor Emmanuel. The young man has collaborated in the writing of some of the plays in which his mother has acted; but his chief claim to fame lies in the story that his reckless extravagance has helped to keep Sarah upon the stage, in which would be very welcome to her old age. The world owes him a debt of gratitude for this—a debt which he seems to have collected rather extensively.

HE FELT SUPERSTITIOUS.

Stories of Early Days When Money Was New and Rude.

Nobody who knows him now would ever imagine that Rev. John Neil, D.D., was ever superstitious, but his own confession there was such a time in his life. When he was a young lad in Mono a neighbor had committed suicide and, according to the tradition of the time, his ghost would walk abroad at night until his soul was exorcised. It so happened that that night young Neil had been to church and was returning home when as he came to a very dark piece of road alongside the graveyard he felt over something. Previously in a state of terror for fear that he would meet the self-murderer on the road, the lad fell into a panic when there was a rush on every side of him. For a moment he believed that all the inhabitants of the graveyard were upon him. He found, however, that he was in the midst of a flock of sheep and that he had fallen over one lying in the road. This somewhat allayed his fears, but the doctor confesses that he ran home as fast as he could, taking no chances of meeting the suicide.

Although most of the early settlers in Mono were superstitious, Dr. Neil tells of one who was not. He had a wife who ruled him with a rod of iron. She died suddenly. One of the neighbors offered to sit up with the widower, but the reply was:

"No, I am not nearly as much afraid of her to-night as I was a week ago when she was alive and well!"

Another good story told by Dr. Neil relates to his school days. The teacher taught literally with the aid of the rod and it was a rare day indeed but that some pupil got a thrashing. Eventually public opinion became aroused and there was an agitation for the substitution of some more humane form of punishment. The question became an issue in a provincial election campaign and one candidate, whose first name was Duncan, roundly condemned corporal punishment, and pledged his word that if he were sent to the Legislature he would have a law passed to have it abolished. In the course of his speech, he said:

"I was never whipped but once in school, and that time it was for telling the truth."

Whereupon a brawny Highlander in the audience shouted out:

"And, Duncan, it cured ye!"

BALDY THE BRAVE.

King of Dogs Had an Exciting Career.

No dog ever had such a remarkable career as Baldy, of Nome, who has just died.

He was the original of all Jack London's hero dogs, and the winner of western sledge races for seven years. Many of his sons and grandsons served in the French army during the war.

As a malmute puppy, Baldy was sold to the Darling kennels at Nome. He became the companion and friend of Mrs. Darling.

When he was two years old he achieved fame as the leader of a dog team in the annual sweepstake races which are held in Alaska, leading his team to victory through four hundred and eighteen miles of snow and ice.

During the next seven years he won contest after contest, until he was known from rating to live the life of an honored veteran at the Californian home of "Scotty" Allen, the trainer who had coached him for the sweepstakes.

Baldy was as human as it is possible for a dog to be, and many tales are told of his cunning and resource. He saved his trainer's life several times—once by turning a whole team of dogs round and going back many miles to where Allen lay unconscious in the snow.

Once a bad-tempered dog got into the Darling team, and, of his leader, strained at his harness, and did all the things that a sledge-racing dog is supposed not to do. For a time Baldy did nothing, probably hoping that the new-comer would turn over a new leaf. But things went from bad to worse, and at last Baldy could stand it no longer. One day he walked quietly into the middle of a fight which the unruly dog had started, and, with a good grip of the wrong-doer's throat, settled the trouble once and for all.

Canada's Trade.

The United States was Canada's best customer during January, purchasing $30,270,860 of Canadian products, as against $21,134,776 in January of last year, according to a summary of trade with that country issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. During January, however, Canada's purchases in the United States outdistanced her sales to that country by nearly $10,000,000, the figures being $49,142,939, as against $33,598,444 in January of last year, and $51,823,917 in the corresponding month of the previous year. Foreign produce exported to the United States during January was valued at $686,236, as against $740,463 in January last year.

The United Kingdom purchased $21,722,492 of Canadian produce in January and $39,372 of foreign produce exported from this country, as against $9,769,672 Canadian produce and $94,896 foreign produce in January of last year. Imports into Canada for consumption from the United Kingdom in January of this year were $10,967,129, as against $9,769,672 in the corresponding month of last year. Canada's exports of Canadian products to other countries during January were $12,665,596, making a total export of Canadian produce during January of $64,658,942, as against $51,129,490 in January, 1922, and a total export of $46,198,080 for the month. Total exports in January, 1921, were $81,912,216. Imports from countries other than United States and United Kingdom during January were valued at $8,235,777, as against $8,108,137 in January last year. Total imports in January, 1923, were $58,085,845, as against $51,476,253 in January of last year and $72,252,233 in the same month in the previous year.

Don Quixote.

A monument to Don Quixote is to be raised at Esquivias, Spain. It will be a heroic statue raised to a character in action, as Barrie's Peter Pan is to the "immortalized" in Kensington Gardens.

HE SAVED MANY LIVES

CENTENARY OF PASTEUR HAS JUST BEEN CELEBRATED.

He Was the First Man to Establish the Fact That Infectious Diseases Are Due to Microbes, and This Discovery Led to Use of Vaccines and Serums.

Pasteur, the French scientist, whose centenary was celebrated throughout France recently, has been described as the greatest benefactor humanity has known. His work saved millions of lives.

Pasteur was born at Strasbourg on December 27, 1822, and it was there that he taught chemistry from 1848 to 1854; there, with an annual salary of but 1,200 francs, he developed in a laboratory always lacking in equipment the discoveries which have immortalized him. It was there also that he married "Mademoiselle Marie," daughter of the rector Laurent, whose hand he asked for in these terms:

"My father is a tanner at Arbois, a small town of Jura. My sisters are with my father, engaged in the cares of home and business, and taking the place of my mother, whom we had the misfortune to lose in the month of May, last year. As to the future, all I can say is that, unless a complete change should take place in my tastes, I shall consecrate myself to chemical research."

At a time when French instruction was introduced in the University of Alsace, it was well that Pasteur brought to it the lesson of that simplicity which German pride has never known. This was illustrated when on the 18th of January, 1871, he returned his diploma to the University of Boon. The dean, Dr. Maurice Nauman, in reply to the occasion to express his great contempt for Pasteur. The generations that have succeeded these two men can now contrast at first hand the brilliant achievements of Pasteur with the contempt of Naumann.

"All of you, whatever may be your career," said Pasteur in the hour of his success, "do not permit yourselves to be discouraged by the trails of certain sad periods that pass over a nation. Say to yourselves first, 'What have I done with my education?' Then, as you proceed, 'What have I done for my country?' And when your efforts have been more or less favored by success in life, you should, as you approach the end, be able to say sincerely, 'I have done all that I could have done.'"

There is advice worthy to remember in Pasteur there has come to us a man who has consecrated all his life to others, who wished no other joy than that of accomplishing a benefit for mankind; who by devotion every hour, every impulse of his genius, to the service of humanity, accomplished, to use the words of Brouardel, "The most formidable of revolutions that in thirty centuries have aided medical science."

This great man among the great suffered more than once from the misunderstanding of men. As he was approaching his end he was heard to remark, in reference being made to the many and constant attacks launched by those who attempted to deny or detract from the glory of his work, "I did not know that I had so many enemies."

Pasteur was the first man to establish the fact that infectious diseases are due to microbes. This led to the use of vaccines and serums. It is to Pasteur's work that we owe the immunity from typhoid fever and other diseases of millions of soldiers in the Great War. His glory far transcends that of any other worker in bacteriology, and it is a unique one, consisting in the laying down for all time of the very foundations of the science itself.

After conquering the silk-worm disease, which was destroying the silk industry of France, Pasteur tackled anthrax, which was killing millions of animals all over the world, and found a remedy. He next turned his attention to the cause of hydrophobia. Up to the very one attacked with hydrophobia died an agonizing death. In 1885 a boy who had been bitten fourteen places by a mad dog was taken to Pasteur. Very doubtingly he inoculated the child for ten consecutive days with the antitoxin of rabies, and the child lived. Since then thousands of people bitten by mad dogs have been saved from the terrible form of death.

It was Pasteur's discovery of microbes as a cause of infectious diseases and the festering of wounds that led Lord Lister, a young Glasgow surgeon, to make use of antiseptics, killers of microbes. This effected a veritable revolution in surgery. Pasteur's wonderful achievements entitle him to take his place among the immortals.

The Great Pyramid.

From the summit of the great pyramid there is a grand view southward, down a straggling, but imposing, line of pyramids rising dimly as far as one can see on the southern horizon. Each pyramid was a royal tomb, and for us each such tomb means that a king lived, ruled and died. The line is over sixty miles long, and the oldest pyramids represent the first great age of Egyptian civilization after the land was united under one king. We may call it the pyramid age, and it lasted from 3000 to 2600 B.C.—James H. Breasted, in "Ancient Times."

Bible Lacks Laughs.

Rev. C. A. Williams, who left the Timothy Eaton Memorial Church in Toronto to occupy a pulpit in Vancouver, is a staunch believer in cheerfulness as an aid to religion. Discussing the connection on one occasion, he said it was a benediction to meet a smiling face.

"There are no jokes in the Bible," he remarked. "It is not a book that makes you laugh; it was not written by jesters and humorists. Are we, therefore, to conclude that laughter is wicked and ungodly and that it should be frowned upon and discountenanced? Frankly, I take an entirely opposite view. I believe no one ought to laugh as heartily, nor have as good a time, nor be as happy, as the Christian.

"I believe it would be better for the world and everybody if we all laughed more than we do. We hear grumbling, groaning and complaints enough, giggling and tittering, but not half enough wholesome, healthy and hearty laughter. What a blessing to the world if Christian people would discard their masks of gloom and garments of heaviness, if they would listen to our Blessed Master's repeated exhortation, 'Cheer up,' if we would all laugh more, and if we could all be happy."

IN THE OTTAWA VALLEY.

Romance of the Early Days In That Important Region.

It is just one hundred years since Philemon Wright built a church with a steeple 121 feet high in the new settlement which he had founded on the Quebec side of the Ottawa river, across from the capital of the present day, which leads the Ottawa Journal to recall some of the fascinating details of the early explorations of that region.

Wright had come from his home in Woburn, Mass., in 1796, on an exploration venture, which was repeated several times before he brought his first party of settlers in 1800. Oddly enough, on his second trip he was so impressed with the timber resources in timber that he said there would be "sales enough to furnish any foreign market, even one load 1,000 vessels." On his trip they spent twenty days at Hull, climbing more than 100 trees, in order to see as much of their surroundings as they could. As a result of these "all he was able to hire all the men he wanted."

When he set forth in February, 1800, he brought twenty-five men, mill-irons, axes, scythes, hoes, tools generally, fourteen horses, eight oxsleighs, seven sleighs, five canoes, and according to his own record of precedence), and many barrels of clear pork with no bone. They passed through Montreal and slowly ascended the north bank of the Ottawa, the last portion of the trip being on the ice. "I never knew a party more happy and cheerful in my life," said Wright of his party.

All hands joined in cutting down the first tree on March 2, and "the sounds of the axe brought the Indians from their sugar-making." The chiefs of two tribes, the Algonquins of the Lake of Two Mountains came up and watched them and their tools and materials, "whoopoing and laughing," and they went off much impressed to have a look at the first "lame animals" they had ever seen. The following been born and brought up on the Great Lakes in the west they had never seen the white man's ox. They weighed four or five pounds—their own weighed barely half a pound—and "jumped and whooped and hurrahed" with enthusiasm. This was stimulated by the bestowal of a stiff hooker of rum apiece, and then they returned to their sugar-making. Apparently, however, the effects of the rum wore off, because shortly afterward we find them asking through an interpreter, one George Brown, clerk in the Indian trade, what authority Philemon had to cut down their trees, anyway. Philemon referred them, somewhat disingenuously, to the Great Father across the water, and to his deputy, Sir John Johnston, the Indian Agent. The Indians offered lands for $30 down, which seemed reasonable enough, but Philemon had a business head of his own, and he replied by asking the Indians to produce their own documents establishing their rights. The latter replied that their rights had been granted to their ancestors, who had no documents for obvious reasons. It must be confessed that the "savages" had the best of the argument, though they got the worst of the deal."

Surely an enterprise and a scene worthy of a novelist or a painter with imagination.

The Parthenon.

The announcement by the Greek Government of a plan to restore the Parthenon has aroused much discussion among lovers of art. Opponents of the project assert that the very ruins are a tradition the destruction of which would be a greater evil than any benefits a restoration would bring about could offset, even if the restoration turned out perfect. Advocates of the idea maintain that enough of the original remains to guarantee a perfect restoration, and that restoration is the only thing to save the temple from complete collapse. Further propping of the walls will deface them.

A Norwegian Problem.

Railways or motor cars, that is the question in Norway. That progressive country, where the sun stays up all night six months in the year, is planning a program of transportation expansion to cover the next forty years, and one of the problems involved in the planning is whether it is advisable to establish automobile routes instead of building branch and local railway lines.

She was born at York Factory, on Hudson Bay, and at an early age entered a Methodist Mission School at Norway House, where, under the care of Miss Riley, a member of the staff, she was educated and trained. Mr. Frank Yeigh says he cannot begin to fill the requests coming in from all parts of the country for Miss Nickawa. Wine and Beer Agitation in Ontario.

This move for a beer and wine referendum in Ontario is a senseless and extravagant one. On October 20, 1919, the electorate went to the polls and voted "No" with a 339,114 majority on the question of the sale of beer in Government stores. A still more emphatic "No" was voted on the question of the sale of beer in standard hotels, the majority being 369,252. The third question on the same ballot paper sought the information as to whether the voters wished, or not, the sale of both spirituous and malt liquor in Government stores. On this last issue the battle of the referendum was fought, for it must not be forgotten that the bars had been closed in Ontario by Provincial Prohibition for three years, and there was not much hope of getting them opened even for the sale of beer. And at that stage of the game bright hopes were entertained of the restoration of the beverage sale of spirits, but not over the bar. The proposal of the sale of beer, and also, the Government sale of liquor, have both been turned down so recently and so decisively, there can exist no reason to believe that there would be any other verdict in another vote at this time. But the liquor traffic care nothing about the waste of time and money, as that has always been its constant policy in the interests of self-gain.

Had to Fight to Get His Breath

Reed Declares Gases Were So Bad He Nearly Choked at Times.

"The best I can say is not half good enough for Tanlac," states Frederick E. Reed, 286 Roxborough Ave., Hamilton, Ont., well known business man.

"Last winter grippe and tonsilitis confined me to my home for weeks and left me so thin and frail it looked like I could never get back to my business again. I would choke up with gas until I had to fight for breath, was so nauseated I could scarcely retain a thing, and pains in my stomach and sides would double me up. I could scarcely sleep a wink, and my hands were so trembly I couldn't even arrange my tie.

"However, the Tanlac treatment suited my case so well it ended my troubles, increased my weight, and fixed me up to where I felt as fine as I ever did. I feel right all the time now, and haven't missed a day from my business since I finished the treatment. Tanlac has no equal."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Take no substitute. Over 37-million bottles sold.

Trees on County Roads.

County Solicitor W. G. Wilson has commenced proceedings in Police Magistrate Ruttan's Court to recover penalties for those who have cut and destroyed trees on Highways of the county—Provincial County Roads Nos. 54, 35 and 25, and other county roads. Two cases have already been heard, in one case the defendant settled, and the other is still pending. All owners of property on County Highways and other parties should from this take warning, and not interfere with shade trees on such roads or they will be cited before court, and in future the extreme penalties of the law will be asked of the court. Township authorities should take similar steps. It is an outrage that such natural beauties should be destroyed.

Electric Lights for Farmers and Others.

The result of County Clerk Wilson's correspondence with the Government, at the instance of the County Council, is that Col. Carmichael, Government member of the Hydro Commission, in a letter states as follows:—"Regarding the Provincial Government paying the fifty per cent. subsidy on rural primary transmission lines to small villages and hamlets, I took this matter up with the Hydro-Electric Power Commission and am now advised by the secretary of the Commission that the Commission has approved of the principle of including hamlets and police villages as customers of Rural Power Districts, and these are now included as such in the Commissioner's application to the Government for bonuses on lines constructed in such Rural Power Districts, so that as far as this phase of the situation is concerned, hamlets and police villages are now receiving the benefits of the fifty per cent. bonus on primary lines, and villages and hamlets may co-operate with the farmers in the district in obtaining sufficient revenue to warrant the construction of Rural Lines."

RANEY HAS RESIGNED

Attorney-General of Ontario Leaves Public Life.

His Formal Announcement Was Made to the U.F.O. Executive in His Own Constituency — Premier Drury Is Not Ready to Make Any Statement Regarding His Plans.

TORONTO, May 7.—The action that the Government is to take upon Hon. W. E. Raney's resignation from the post of Attorney-General has not yet been determined. Hon. Mr. Drury stated that the matter was so far one purely between the Attorney-General and himself, and that he had not yet decided upon the course which he was to follow.

"Mr. Raney," Hon. Mr. Drury said, "placed a letter in my hands stating his desire to retire from public life and offering to give me his resignation either now or to stay until after the election. I have not yet decided what course I shall take."

The matter of the Attorney-General's resignation has not, accordingly, yet come before the Ontario Cabinet, and there is yet to be learned, therefore, the attitude which his colleagues of the Executive Council will take in regard to it.

Hon. Mr. Raney's intention to retire from the political field was formally stated in the following letter which was read on Saturday afternoon to a meeting of the U.F.O. Executive, which gathered at Fergus, in his riding of East Wellington. It was addressed to J. A. Douglas, of Mount Forest, and read:

"Toronto, 3rd May, 1923.

"Dear Mr. Douglas: Since you were here the other day I have given further consideration the question we were then discussing of my candidature for East Wellington, and I have been compelled reluctantly to decide not to seek a re-nomination for a seat in the next Legislature. Will you please communicate the fact to the executive meeting at its meeting at Fergus on Saturday?

"As I explained to you, my reasons for this decision are altogether personal, and have no reference to any question of the policy or record of the present administration, which I will continue to support in any way in my power.

"I shall, of course, want to attend your convention. I expect to be absent from Toronto for a couple of weeks after the election and that was the reason why I suggested the week of the 21st for the convention. My retirement may make it desirable to take a little more time for the selection of a candidate and the executive may perhaps decide that the week of the 21st will be time enough. If not, as I said in my former letter, I shall endeavor to accommodate myself to the date chosen by the executive.

"With much appreciation of your many courtesies, I remain, Yours very sincerely, W. E. RANEY."

J. A. Douglas, Esq., Mount Forest, Ont.

Hon. Mr. Raney was appointed Attorney-General on November 14, 1919, when Premier Drury found himself placed in power without a single legal representative among his supporters, and after the position had been declined by the present Conservative member for Kingston, W. F. Nickle, K.C. He has been much in the forefront of the political life of the province ever since, more particularly with respect to what may be called purely social legislation. His enforcement of the O.T.A. has been rigid, but, so he claimed, always fair. His most notable achievement was the passing of the bill prohibiting the publication of betting odds, his avowed object being to destroy handbook betting.

WANTS TO ENTER CANADA.

Labor Agitator Barred and Makes Official Protest.

HOUTON, Maine, May 7.—Alexander Howat, deposed president of the Kansas district of the United Mine Workers of America, left Houlton for New York with the avowed purpose of renewing his fight for admission to Canada.

Howat, while on his way to address meetings of the coal miners in Cape Breton, was detained at McAdam Junction, N.B., by the Canadian immigration authorities and later the Department of Immigration at Ottawa ruled he could not enter the Dominion.

The action of the Canadian authorities in denying me admission to the country is an outrage," Howat said before leaving. "If I am stopped, any other working man can be refused admission when there is no just cause."

Howat said that his appeal from the Canadian immigration ruling was filed with the agent of McAdam Junction, April 25. He said that in spite of efforts made in his behalf by the Kansas State Department and by scores of mine workers' unions, the Commissioner of Immigration at Ottawa steadily refused to state the grounds why admission was refused.

Had a Weak Heart.

SIMCOE, May 7.—After fifteen minutes deliberation of the jury investigating the death of Mrs. Gordon Butler, who died following the collapse of shelves in Learn's grocery, on Peel Street, arrived at the following conclusion.

"That Mrs. Butler came to her death owing to her personal condition, a defective heart, and that no evidence was produced attaching blame for negligence to any person or persons."

Eye-witnesses of the accident stated that Mrs. Butler's feet were caught beneath the cans and bottles, but that she apparently suffered no injury other than a slight arm bruise which the doctors found.

The jurymen were: D. T. McColl, foreman; O. Burnham, R. Cropp, Grout, Secretary; C. A. Turvey, A. Smith and G. S. Fogly.

WILL VISIT ITALY.

King and Queen of England Passing Through France.

MODANE, France, May 7.—King George and Queen Mary of Great Britain passed through here about 9 o'clock Sunday evening, on their way to Rome, where they will be the guests of the Italian sovereigns at the Quirinal Palace. The station was decorated with British, French and Italian flags, and a beautiful bouquet of Alpine flowers from the mountains of Savoy, from the Mayor of Modane, together with some lovely spring blossoms from the Italian colony here, were handed to Queen Mary.

French and Italian officials were present at the station, and Count Carlo Macchi di Cellere, master of ceremonies at the Italian court, welcomed the royal visitors in the name of the King and Queen of Italy.

Their Majesties' special cars were detached from the French train and attached to the Italian royal train, which had been sent to the frontier to meet them. The engine was driven by the chief engineers of the Italian railways, and was decorated with British and Italian flags.

LENIN'S END IS NEAR

Soviet Cannot Find Man to Fill His Place.

With the Death of the Most Powerful of the Bolsheviks in Sight, Trotzky Endeavored to Seize Reins of Power, But Failed to Do So—Anti - Communists Anxious Regarding Future.

RIGA, May 7.—Lenin has resigned himself to death. The most distinguished physicians in Europe are baffled more by the Russian Premier's apathy than the strange malady that robbed him of his senses, the use of body and mind.

The greatest secrecy is maintained as to the nature of Lenin's illness. It is known the left side of his body is paralyzed, and that he also suffers from catarrh of the lungs. One high source declares it to be a strange disease, caused by the bursting of tiny veins in the forehead, and that the illness is progressive.

Neither Lenin's successor was the real purpose of the Communist Congress just concluded. War Minister Trotzky, who made a survey of industry, endeavored to acquire control of it, as well as the army—which would make him the biggest man in Russia—but he failed.

Power lies in the hands of a group of four—Stalin, Trotzky, Zinovieff and Kamenff. They have arrayed themselves under the name of Leninrassin, the best-liked soviet negotiator abroad, failing hopelessly in his efforts to have Russia pay her debts to countries with which she desired to open relations, and naid over big industries to foreigners to save them from ruin. For this Krassin is called a Menshevik, and although he still remains in the party, his influence is gone.

But Lenin's place has not been filled and cannot be filled. Anti-Communists in Russia mourn his passing more than Communists. His restraining hand is gone and neither Trotzky, who is brilliant, but unbending; Kamenoff, who is surewd, but weak; Zinovieff, fat lover of food and Lenin's mouthpiece; nor Stalin, a Georgian with no European purpose in view, can singly or together fill the boots of Lenin.

ESCAPED OVER ICE FLOES.

Sulp, Frozen In, Ran Short of Provisions.

NORTH SYDNEY, N.S., May 7.—After scrambling for thirteen miles over one of the roughest ice packs ever piled up off Sydney harbor, twelve passengers and seven members of the crew of the steamer Kyle reached shore Sunday afternoon, making the last few hundred yards of the journey in dories which put off to meet them.

The Kyle is stuck in very heavy floes about eight miles off Cranberry Head, and has been unable for days to reach North Sydney until the wind changes and breaks up the pack. Only enough steam is being kept up to heat the engine quarters. Over big only about 25 tons of coal in the ship's bunkers.

Some of the 52 passengers have been on board for a month, or since the vessel left St. John's, Nfld. After eighteen days in Fortune Bay she left for Baie aux Basques, Nfld., last Sunday, and has been stuck all week at sea covering a distance which she makes ordinarily in a night's steaming.

Sunday it was decided to send a party across the ice to get some flour, and 12 passengers who were anxious to be on their way decided to accompany the seaman. So much was the going over the huge piled-up floes that many detours had to be made, increasing the distance to more than 13 miles.

Shortly after the party left the ship it was learned by wireless that the ice pack was drifting away from shore, and by the time the adventurers reached the edge of the ice there were several hundred yards of blue water between them and their destination.

Ten Lose Lives in Explosion.

TRINIDAD, Col., May 7.—Ten men lost their lives when gas in the north slope of the southwest mine, of the Rocky Mountain Fuel Company, near Aguilar, exploded Saturday afternoon. The bodies have been recovered.

Eighty men working all night in shifts struggled against the barriers of wreckage to recover the bodies. Hundreds of men and women gathered at the mine and kept vigil. Three bodies were recovered early last night, and the remainder to-day. The blast apparently caught the men as they toiled about 1,800 to 2,000 feet inside the mine.

Twelve Killed, Fifty Injured.

HAVANA, May 7.—Twelve persons were killed and about fifty injured yesterday morning in a headon collision between two electric railway trains going at high speed around a curve near the town of Canasi, several of the killed were burned to death. Three coaches were completely wrecked.

CATTLE MARKETS

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

TORONTO, May 7.—The cattle trade at the Union Stock Yards was slow last week, considering the light offering, and prices throughout generally held steady. The receipts aggregated about 2,000 head less than the offering of the previous week. Trading in export cattle was rather limited, but prices showed little change. Prospects at the week-end were to the effect that the cattle market would hold steady and a good demand was looked for in export classes. Choice weighty steers recently were purchased by Ontario farmers during the week at prices generally steady with those paid for butcher cattle.

Fat export steers were firm from $7.50 to $8.25, while feeders for the Ontario farmers were taken at from $6 to $7.85 a hundred.

Stockers for the week were light, and if anything there was a slightly better tone to the market. Choice stockers sold as high as $7.50 to $7.75. Cannished steers sold as low as $5 a hundred. Choice milch cows and springers were wanted by Quebec buyers, at from $100 to $120, but few of the desired quality were found on the market.

Hog prices declined early in the week in the face of a heavy offering. Sales were made on Monday at $11. The market, however, was stronger at the close, buyers paying from $10.84 to $10.90 on the fed and watered basis.

The calf trade was generally steady, with best offerings bringing $13 a hundred. There were few calves, however, good enough to bring the top price, and the majority were weighed up at prices ranging from $4.50 to $8.75 a hundred.

Spring lambs ruled around the $20 portion of the week's offering, and the best of these brought from $19 to $19 each. Lambs that were considered too young by the buyers sold as low as $8 each. There was a good demand for the few sheep that offered, and the best light kinds sold from $8 to $9 a hundred.

Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards last night for to-day's market were: cars, 244; cattle, 3,241; calves, 520; hogs, 2,933; sheep, 852.

CHICAGO LIVE STOCK.

CHICAGO, May 7.—Cattle receipts 500; compared with week ago, beef steers of value to sell $2 to $9.75; 10c to 15c lower spots more. Lower grades together with strictly choice kinds about steady; top matured steers and yearling grades $10.25; beef cows, 25c lower; veal calves, largely 50c higher; stockers and feeders uneven, mostly 25c to 40c, up.

Sheep receipts 200; market for week: Fat woolled lambs, 25c to 50c, higher; clipped lambs, 50c to $1 higher; ewes 75c, higher; extreme top, $13.10; few under $12; sheep supply very limited.

Hog receipts 22,000; steady to 10c higher; lightweight up most; top, $8.30; bulk, $8.10 to 225-pound average, $8.15 to $8.25; $40 to $40-pound butchers, $7.80 to $8.10; packing sows, mostly $6.50 to $6.75; desirable 130 to 130-pound pigs, $8.75 to $9; estimated holdover, 2,500; heavyweight, $7.50 to $8.10; medium, $7.85 to $8.25; light, $7.85 to $8.25; light light, $7.75 to $8.15; packing sows, smooth, $6.65 to $7.25; packing sows, rough, $6 to $6.75; killing pigs, $6 to $7.50.

BUFFALO LIVE STOCK.

EAST BUFFALO, N.Y., May 7.—Cattle receipts 250, steady. Calves receipts 200; 50c, lower, $4 to $10.50. Hogs receipts 4,000, generally steady; yorkers, $8 to $8.60; mixed, $8.40 to $8.75; yorkers and pigs, $8.60 to $8.65; roughs, $6.50 to $8.75; pigs, $7.75; roughs, $6.25; stags, $4 to $5. The Late W. F. Hall.

Mr. Wm. Fletcher Hall, for over fifty years a citizen of Napanee, passed away quite suddenly on Wednesday last. Mr. Hall was in his office on Friday and was confined to his bed but a few days. The late Mr. Hall was a native of this county and was widely known. Years ago he was secretary-treasurer of the Napanee Paper Co., which operated a mill at Strathcona and of late years has been in the insurance business. For many years Mr. Hall has been connected with educational matters, first as a member of the School Board for some years and for a long number of years as secretary-treasurer of the Board, and his thorough knowledge of the needs of the schools and his familiarity with school law, were invaluable to the Napanee School Board. For over fifty years Mr. Hall was a leading member of Trinity Church, and for forty-five years its regarding steward and by his death Trinity church looses one of its most active workers and adherents. The funeral took place from his residence, on Friday afternoon, to the church he loved so well, and the large edifice was filled with citizens anxious to pay their last respects to the departed friend. Besides his widow he leaves four daughters, Mrs. Myers, New York, Mrs. J. E. Madden, Mrs. G. W. Gibbard and Miss Florence Hall, Napanee, and one son, Mr. G. E. Hall, Montreal.

Basketball.

The girls' senior basketball team of Sydenham Street Methodist church, Kingston, journeyed to Napanee on Saturday afternoon to meet the team of Napanee High School and defeated the Napanee team 4 to 32 after a well fought game which was nip and tuck all the way. By superior shooting the Kingston girls took the lead for the game and their half-time score was 24-15, six points ahead. In the second half they increased their lead by five points though the Napanee girls pressed hard and made a great attempt to even things up. The Napanee team played without substitutes, while Sydenham used Misses M. Asselstine and A. Ada frequently. The Kingston party travelled on the block loaned through the kindness of a Kingston firm and enjoyed the trip all the way through.

SPECIAL RATE FOR COAL

National Railways Will Endeavor to Aid Alberta Mines.

OTTAWA, May 7.—Lower railway rates on coal from Alberta and the Maritimes are in sight. In a telegram to Senator J. S. McLennan, Chairman of the Special Committee of the Senate on Fuel Supply, Sir Henry Thornton, president of the Canadian National Railways, states that the National roads are prepared to quote a rate of $8 a ton on Alberta coal moving in trainload lots to Ontario and "similar consideration" on Maritime Provinces coal. Sir Henry's telegram follows:

"After careful consideration, Canadian National Railways are able to quote rate of nine dollars per ton on the anthracite coal now moving in trainload lots from the coalfields of that province to Ontario. It is understood that in naming this rate you will be applicable during the months of May, June and July, as, prior to May, adverse weather conditions materially affect the cost of movement and after August 1 our equipment is needed for the transportation of grain. Similar consideration will also, of course, be given to the movement of coal from the Maritime Provinces.

"It is also to be understood that coal operators at shipping points and consignees in Ontario will co-operate with the railway company to achieve the common object, as I am sure will be their desire.

To Help Highways Boost Prices.

EDMONTON, May 7.—That the lower freight rate of $9 a ton for Alberta coal to Ontario would not be sufficient to allow of any big coverage of the Ontario market by Alberta was the unanimous opinion of Edmonton coal operators to-night, when told of the announcement of Sir Henry Thornton.

"It will undoubtedly help some," said one prominent operator, "but it is not low enough to open a market for continuous shipments during the summer months. To make a continuous summer market demand we would have to get a six-dollar rate."

The MAN NOBODY KNEW

Holworthy Hall

"But Wait a Minute!"

"No," Hilliard grew warm. "I'd give a good deal," he said soberly, "if I hadn't tangled myself up in all that imitation history. Well, I'm in for it now. I've published so much that I didn't need to—I'm wondering how in thunder I can ever get out of it when the time comes. That was the idea, you remember—coals of fire. What's bothering me is that there's nobody to tend the furnace."

"But I thought you were so anxious to keep in the shade?"

"Yes, but I didn't need to crawl in a hole, and pull it in after me! Well, we'll wait and see. After I've gone a little further—and of course, you know I've hardly scratched the surface yet—"

"I know you haven't." The big man tucked his gloves into his breast pocket and brought out a silver cigarette case. "Have one?"

"Thank you. And you might take these drafts now; three of 'em. Right? Good. Well—any developments?"

"What?" Harmon tapped his cigarette case in the palm of his left hand. "Oh, you mean the mine?"

Hilliard nodded. "Yes. Have you gone any further with the shaft yet? Two or three of the more optimistic men are holding back until something happens with that."

"Shaft?" Harmon was puzzled. "What shaft?" He placidly stowed away the drafts. "I'm not sinking any new shafts at this stage of the game."

It was Hilliard's turn to be puzzled. "Why, I mean the old shaft on Silverbow No. 1. Have you gone any further with it? I've told these people we were just starting. That's right, isn't it?"

Harmon laughed noisily.

"Oh, that shaft! Don't you think it's a little early to begin on that? Say, about ninety thousand dollars too early?"

As Hilliard sat gazing at him in profound bewilderment a waiter slid up alongside him and coughed for his attention.

"Gentleman wants to speak to you outside, Mr. Hilliard. In the lobby. Says it's important."

"Oh!" Hilliard drew the back of his hand across his forehead. "Tell him I'll come right out. Will you excuse me a moment, Mr. Harmon?"

"Sure! Go ahead." The promoter sat back comfortably and gave him a wave of dismissal. Hilliard, his pupils narrowing, went out to the doorway. A pace or two distant one of the vice presidents of the Trust and Deposit company—a friend of Cullen's and a very good man to know—was loitering restively.

"Hello, Hilliard," he said, wrinkling his forehead. "How are you? Look here, it's none of my business, of course, but I couldn't help wondering how much you know about that chap you're sitting with. Don't be offended; it's a friendly question. Simply my interest in you as one of our clients."

"Why, I know a good deal about him."

The banker continued solemnly: "You probably know a lot more about him than I do, then, but just the same, I wanted to make sure. That's all." He turned, but Hilliard stopped him.

"Well, what do you know about him?"

"Before I answer that—is he a friend of yours?" The question was too blunt to be diplomatic, and too suggestive to be disregarded.

"Not exactly that; he's a rather good acquaintance, though. In a business way only—what he is socially I don't know, and I don't think I much care."

"So you don't need any advice about his business connections?"

"Why, I think not." He was nettled by the banker's manner.

"The only thing about it," said the vice president, nettled in his turn by Hilliard's brevity, "is that if you'd said you didn't know him very well, I'd have offered you some suggestions. I'd have expected you to thank me—I really - would. Under the circumstances, I can't very well go any further than this. Sorry I interrupted you."

"No, but wait a minute! I—"

The vice president's refusal was firm and definite.

"I can't say another word. Not another one. If you know him, that's sufficient." And he strode away across the lobby, leaving Hilliard dumfounded.

Mr. Harmon, smiling broadly, half arose from his chair as the masquerader came slowly back to the table and sat down hard.

"Well," he said. "More business?"

Hilliard shook his head.

"On the contrary." His voice had in it a curious dullness which the broker was quick to catch.

"No bad news, I hope?"

"I'm not sure. Let's go on discussing the mine."

"No much else to discuss, is there? It's the same old mine." He looked intently at Hilliard. "What's got into you, anyway, in the last couple of minutes? You've lost all your pep. You look as though you've seen a ghost."

"Maybe I have," said Hilliard, with a short laugh.

"Well?"

Hilliard regarded him with an odd intermingling of respect and alarm. The respect was a holdover from the past—from the early impression he had formed from Harmon's resplendent offices in New York, and Harmon's contempt for money. He had considered his employer, at worst, a weak-principled vendor of legitimate securities.

Mr. Harmon," Hilliard said reluctantly. "I'm in a mighty awkward position. . . . We can't afford to let anything spoil this campaign, can we?"

"Not if we can very well help it. What's bothering you?"

"For over ten weeks now, I've been building up a reputation—you know what I've been doing; you know how much depends on it! Your name hasn't been mentioned once; I've been selling this thing on my own personality—holding myself out as the principal. Well, the man who called me outside just now—he's one of the solid banking crowd up here—he spoke of you as though he knew you. In fact—to be perfectly frank—he called me out there to ask me about you. Now, I don't know what dealings you've ever had with him, or with anyone else up here, but it struck me that if there is anything between you and Syracuse, or any of its fairly big men, perhaps it would be better if I knew it. You see, this thing I'm selling is so darned personal—"

"Who was he?" Harmon's voice rasped.

"Embree—of the Trust and Deposit company—"

"Oh, yes." Harmon smoked reflectively. "Yes, we know each other. What did he have to say?"

"It wasn't so much what he said as the way he said it. I suppose you've had some disagreement with these people?"

"Some disagreement," admitted Harmon, grinning. "These up-state farmers and I love each other like a couple of strange bulldogs. Still—"

"If it isn't objectionable to you," said Hilliard, hesitating, "I'd rather like to know a bit about it, Mr. Harmon. The subject might come up later. It's almost sure to, now that Embree's seen you and spoken to me about you. And if you've had any quarrel with this crowd, even if it wasn't your fault, and if it came out that I'm working for you, and there was any talk about it, you can see how I'd have to be on the defensive.

"So if you could just give me a faint idea—"

"Plain English is a lot better than a faint idea," said Harmon carelessly. "I floated some steel bonds up here once. Prettiest bonds you ever saw in your life, too."

"Oh! And they didn't turn out well?"

"Not exactly. The company was too much like Silverbow, I guess—all float and no lode."

For a moment, Hilliard thought that he hadn't heard aright.

"What was that you said?" he managed.

Harmon reiterated it.

"Too much Silverbow. Only they pumped the water out of it sooner than we will. That was five years ago."

At first, Hilliard was untouched by the shock; the force of it seemed to pass over him entirely; then all at once, as he was caught by the drift of it, his hands began to tremble violently; and his palms were clammy with sweat. His stomach seemed to drop out of him, and he was nauseated by the tremendous purport of his employer's cynicism.

"Mr. Harmon!" he panted, under his breath. "Mr. Harmon!"

The New Yorker looked at him in genuine surprise.

"What's the matter, Hilliard? You look sick. Or . . . d——n it, man if that's another one of your bluffs you're wasting your time. You haven't worked up such a holy disposition you believe in this mine, have you?" He moved uneasily. "I wish you'd wipe that pious expression off your face—or is it glued on?"

"Hilliard's voice shook uncontrollably.

"This . . . this mine!" he stammered. "You told me—"

"I'll stand by everything I've ever told you, Hilliard. I'll prove it. It's an area of mineralized schist with disseminated copper values. And we've got over a hundred acres of it. And part of the shaft is in!" He laughed noiselessly. "Of course, altogether there's about five hundred square miles of that same sort of land in the same state, but what's the odds as long's you're happy? Tell me you aren't wise? Rot! Why, you knew all about it when we were on the boat!"

Hilliard's muscles were working in hysterical jumps, and his face was distorted.

"Y-you . . . y-you're saying . . . y-you're saying I've been selling . . . s-selling to my friends a piece of d——n worthless property? Are you?"

"Shut up!" The big man was dominant, ugly. "Understand me? You keep your mouth shut if you know what's good for you! Didn't you come up here to get square with your friends? Your friends!" His accent was superlatively contemptuous. "You knew it wasn't a producing mine, didn't you?"

"You told me it was a wonderful prospect! I knew it was a long shot, but I thought there was some value there . . . a lot of it . . . and you said the shaft—"

"See here, you aren't a mighty good actor, you're . . . are you going to claim you didn't know what this mine was? After all that whining and squealing of yours about your getting even? Then what in thunder did you want to come back here for?"

"To make some money—to get some fun out of it. I wanted to make fools of those who'd been one of the solid banking crowd up here—he spoke of you as though he knew you. In fact—to be perfectly frank—he called me out there to ask me about you. Now, I don't know what dealings you've ever had with him, or with anyone else up here, but it struck me that if there is anything between you and Syracuse, or any of its fairly big men, perhaps it would be better if I knew it. final effort, and his fist gestured his accusation.

"You know what I'm going to do about it, don't you?"

"Yes." Harmon nodded, as he drew the smoke deep into his lungs.

"I'm going straight back to those four men, and—"

"No." Harmon wagged his head. "No, you can't very well do that, either—even if you're as shocked as you look. Look at it just a minute . . . look at our contract. There's some loopholes for me you could drive a motortruck through; but you haven't got one as big as a knitting needle. No, son, the best thing for you to do is to take a brace, and go get another sixty thousand while the getting is good."

"Not necessarily!" Hilliard's high-pitched laugh was brittle.

Harmon blowed the smoke to eddy gently from his nostrils. "Yes—necessarily."

"You think I'll raise my finger after this, except to . . . what do you take me for?"

"I take you," said Harmon deliberately, "for a short-sighted young man in a mighty bad spot. You don't want these folks up here to know the whole truth, do you? It wouldn't hurt me any—but after the record you made here before you got yourself kicked out two years ago, . . . Oh! don't jump! You don't think I've been asleep, do you? . . . I don't believe you'd get much sympathy. Not much! And I've invested a lot of money in you. . . . I want some big returns. Look me in the eye, son. I want you to calm down. Now, there's only three parties to this deal—you and me and the world. You and me—and the world. Get that? And you and I have got to play straight with each other. You help me get the money, and I'll help you get whatever you want. But when you throw me down, I throw you down, and we'll see who comes out ahead. I'll bet I do. What do you bet?"

Hilliard shook his head helplessly. "You've got to remember," said Harmon in sardonic consolation, "that you're an awful easy man to describe. You can slip out of Syracuse just as easy as you please, and try your durndest to make a getaway, and you'd have pretty hard work to keep away from the Pinkertons for twenty-four hours. And I've got the evidence that would put 'em after you. So don't you plan to run away, son—don't do it."

Hilliard's judgment was tottering. Where did he stand in relation to Armstrong now?

"Well?"

Harmon snatched at the sign of weakness, and was instantly persuasive.

"Stay on another six weeks; make the rest of your killing. After this is over, do what you please. You'll have money enough to suit yourself. I'm playing straight with you . . . . am I not?"

"Yes," said Hilliard, with withering sarcasm, "you are!"

Harmon glowered at him.

"Don't you accuse me of double-crossing you, son! It's the other way round."

"You aren't fool enough to expect me," said Hilliard shakily, "to keep on trying to sell more of this rotten stuff! You aren't enough of a fool for that—"

"I can, and I do. You're in for it now, Hilliard, and you can't very well go back. You've collected money; you can't get your hands on it again; you can't make any restitution. You've lied your head off already; you can't do any better now than to stick to your first story, because the truth's a good deal worse. You'd better make your killing and make it quick. And if you open your head for just one little peep . . . floozy, floozy, and the fat's in the fire. Well . . . ?"

Hilliard's head was splitting with the horror of it. He saw, in a whirling vision of dread, the people of the city rising to denounce him; not merely for his inexcusable masquerade, so grotesquely built upon the dream of regeneration, not only for his vast abuse of personal confidence, not only for the base hypocrisies he had practiced upon his quondam sweetheart, but also for this grossly profitable fraud. Dimly, he argued just as Harmon claimed, he couldn't be in harder straits. A spasm of reckless fatalism shook him.

Harmon, who had been inspecting him critically, took out his fountain pen.

"I'll write you your check for commissions—shall I?" He held the pen poised insinuatingly. "And then we'll forget this little misunderstand, and start fresh. Shall I? Let's see," with great attentiveness to the figures. "Your twenty per cent is twelve thousand four hundred, and that, less half expense . . . call 'em five thousand even . . . that's seventy-four hundred." He tore a sheet from his pocket check book, dried the ink by waving it in the air, and flirted it over to Hilliard. "Put it away and let's have some lunch. If you're afraid to have your friends see me down here, let's have it upstairs. I'm not sensitive, son; it don't pay."

"No," said Hilliard, dully, "and I guess it never will."

"That's the idea! Now you're talking sense! Come on, son, buck up and let's have some lunch. . . ."

At eight o'clock in the evening, when Rufus Waring knocked at Hilliard's door, it was opened by a man with a face to remember afterward. There were deep-cut lines—almost furrows—by the mouth and eyes; and the eyes themselves were startlingly luminous, and drawn. The man's complexion was chalk-white.

"Why, Mr. Hilliard!" exclaimed Waring. "What on earth's the matter with you?"

"Come on in," said Hilliard, and his smile was ghastly. "I've been waiting for you."

CHAPTER X.

Hilliard was waiting, hoping, praying for a blow from fate, but fate, which at other times had been ready enough for fiascoes, and often premature with them, refrained from striking. The interview with Waring had passed without friction (and Hilliard had so contrived to present his data that Waring had finally declined the risk) and the night passed, and the morning came, with its accompanying horde of old regrets and a new and sweeping inrush of fresh hallucinations.

To his tortured imagination, he was a greater paradox than even Jekyll and Hyde; for he was Hilliard and Dicky Morgan, the living and the dead, without the boon of the supernatural to separate them. And yet he felt that the wickedness of what he had done was the wickedness of Dicky Morgan, and that he, Hilliard, the soul, was sitting in impartial judgment on Dicky Morgan, the flesh. He conceded the wrong; he conceded the penalty; nevertheless, his youth cried out to him for mercy.

At the maid's announcement, Doctor Durant, who had been occupied with nothing more momentous than filling a pot-bellied calabash, rose hastily and went out into the hallway.

Hilliard, impatient as he was, in the outer door, started at the kind voice.

"You're not busy?"

"Busily composing my mind," said the doctor. He ushered Hilliard into the comfortable old study and motioned towards a squat little smoking stand. "All kinds of poison there," he said. "Cigar—cigarettes—pipe tobacco. Suit yourself."

Hilliard laughed affectedly.

"You call it poison? And you a doctor—and smoking?"

"Ah, but it's the pleasantest poison there is. . . . I'm always having to explain that to Carol. . . . Matches? Well, what have you been doing to yourself?"

"I?" Hilliard didn't look at him. "Nothing important, doctor."

"But that's not quite true, is it?" The tone was gentle, but it filled Hilliard with panic-stricken qualms. "You've been enjoying a little attack of insomnia, haven't you?"

Hilliard winced.

"Why—yes. As a matter of fact—"

"The doctor attempted a smoke ring, and snuffed at the failure.

"I'm sorry. Business worries?"

"Why—in a way, yes."

The doctor achieved a perfect circlet, and beamed at it.

"Something else?"

"A good deal else," said Hilliard, abstracted. "But that's no reason for me to bother you with it. I didn't know it was so apparent."

Silence.

"It's not my habit," said the doctor presently, "to offer any advice unless I'm asked for it. Gratuitous advice never did anybody any good. And nobody takes it unless it costs something—and often it does. And I'm neither your regular physician nor your confessor. But if I had made a diagnosis at this present minute I'd say that you need a preacher a great deal more than you do a doctor."

"I . . . I do," said Hilliard, looking up sharply. "Only . . . it's out of the question. Just personal things, doctor—nothing I can very well talk about."

"Your trouble," said Doctor Durant, "isn't physical as much as it is spiritual. It's nothing but taut nerves. It's nothing but your struggle against the restraints you put upon yourself. How do I know? You've told me so . . . every time I've seen you. It's in your face, my boy. It's in your eyes. Constantly. And it looks as though the conference is about over . . . because if that isn't Carol coming up the steps, my ears aren't half as good as they used to be."

Both men were on their feet as she came in, swirling.

"Oh!" she cried to Hilliard. "I didn't know you were coming up tonight! Suppose you've guessed you're here, merely smiled, and made no answer; nor did he speak to her until after the doctor, protesting a sudden desire for solitude, had waved them hospitably out of the study into the living room. Carol was in the old familiar corner of the sofa; Hilliard was standing by the fireplace, peering down into the empty grate. He coughed harshly, and an expression of utter hopelessness crept into his eyes. He turned abruptly.

"Well," he said, "just how much would you have cared if you had?"

* * * * *

There was a stately old lamp standing at height behind the sofa; its shadows were gracious and its light, as it crept through a shade of painted vellum, touched Carol softly, in a delicacy of radiance which was infinitely caressing. Her hands were lying idle in her lap; she bent her head, and viewed them studiously.

"Why, I should have cared a great deal," she said. "I'm always disappointed when I miss seeing a friend of mine. What makes you so pessimistic, all of a sudden?"

Hilliard reddened, and his eyes grew brighter.

"Friendship!" he said tardily. "What an accordionlike sort of thing that is!"

"Why, Mr. Hilliard!" Her tone was not the same time interrogatory and reproachful.

"Oh, I'm not speaking of you," he said. "Only of the thing itself. . . . It's big or little, close or distant . . . and it hasn't anything to say about it . . . You'll have to excuse me—I was thinking out loud . . . ."

"Please do!" she said. "You were on the way to be interesting. Think out loud some more."

Hilliard glanced sharply at her.

"Don't laugh at me!" he said, almost roughly. "For heaven's sake, don't you know that the one time you shouldn't laugh at a man is when he deserves it?"

Carol's attitude was vaguely less suggestive of ease.

"I wasn't laughing at you," she said, "truly. But what you said was so so queer."

"Oh, yes." Hilliard's accent was very flat. "I suppose it was. It must have been. . . . I always seem to be more or less up in the air when I come to see you, don't I? The last time we talked about friendship—"

"But that was at least a month ago," she said hastily, "and in the meantime, you've been just as nice and cheerful as anybody. I thought you were all over your troubles."

"Cheerfulness wasn't what you asked for." Hilliard swallowed hard. "I . . . I came up here, Miss Durant, to have a really serious talk with you . . . . really serious. It's been delayed too long already. It took me two solid days to get my courage up to it. And . . . . and now I'm here. I don't even know how to begin."

He scowled heavily into the vacant fireplace, and held out his hand with a mechanic gesture as though to warm them at an imaginary blaze. "You know," he said absently, "your father is a very extraordinary man—very."

The compliment to the doctor had its invariable effect upon her; she glowed under it.

"I've always known that . . . I'm glad you realize it, too."

He stood erect, and faced her. "I do . . . . it came to me, when I was talking to him, what a great privilege it must be for you to have his advice—and his sympathy . . . when you need it. And there are so few—so incredibly few—people who make you feel like that. One in a thousand. Or, one in ten thousand. People who lift you clear of your trivial little self—and make you think in terms of principles, and not of your own selfish ideas—and still don't preach. . . . It must be a privilege."

"It isn't only for me," she said. "He has enough sympathy for anyone who asks for it. He isn't very worldly—you've noticed that? He can't believe that anybody, or anything, is really bad . . . . and perhaps that's why people come to him so. Of course, it may be that just because he's my father, I—"

"No." Hilliard shook his head. "I've seen a good many fathers, and next to mine. . . . My own was a wonderful man, too, and how I never appreciated him. And seeing the doctor has made me wish . . . oh, it's too childish to talk about!"

"If you were really as old as you try to be," she said gently, "you'd know that it isn't ever childish to be serious about such things as that. On the contrary! And yet there was a time when you wanted me to think you were well over thirty. Why, Mr. Hilliard, you're a boy!" Nevertheless, she regarded him . . . not as one would regard a mere youth, but with appreciably more uncertainty.

Hilliard had flushed warmly.

"That was when I wanted you to think a good many things that weren't true."

"About you?" Her inflection was an invitation to further confidences, and he drew Hilliard incontinently along the path he had planned—and feared—to take.

"Some of them," he admitted. "And some were about you. The fact is, I . . . I've come on a peculiar errand." He cleared his throat violently; his eyes suddenly adored her. "I've come to straighten all that out. Please don't imagine I've suddenly gone crazy or . . . or anything . . . and please don't take anything I say tonight to mean weakness . . . because, honestly, I've thought about this so much that it's rather disintegrated me . . . but I've got to put on some things if I don't want to." His shoulders squared in resolution; and at the look of pain in his eyes, of pain and despair, her whole womanliness went out to him—and he had to be excused, because she was, after all, a woman.

PROMOTED LORD HAIG.

Some Trials of a Professional Toast Master.

The only professional toastmaster in the world, Mr. W. Knightsmith, has met almost every famous man who has lived during the present century.

On one occasion, through a slip of the tongue, Mr. Knightsmith introduced Earl Haig as "Admiral of the Fleet Lord Haig." This caused a mild sensation, but when the toastmaster apologized the great soldier merely thanked him for the honor he had bestowed upon him in promoting him to the senior service.

Another mistake which Mr. Knightsmith has confessed took place at the Royal Automobile Club. Two of the guests were Lord Roberts and Lord Charles Beresford. The toastmaster announced: "Field Marshal the Rt. Hon. Lord Roberts," and then went on, "the Rt. Hon. Lord Charles Roberts." The famous soldier turned to Lord Charles Beresford and said, "Pleased to meet you, brother Charles!"

The toastmaster frequently has to eject uninvited guests who have obtained admission to some important function. Mr. Knightsmith tells a story of the days when suffragettes and their male supporters were giving trouble. It was at a dinner at which Gen. Botha was to speak. The general preferred to give his speech in Dutch and to have it translated as he went along. As he got up, an interrupter started a long speech about "Votes for Women."

He was removed and another man jumped to his feet. He also was ejected. Then a third man got up. Mr. Knightsmith rushed over to him and placed his hand upon the other's shoulder. He was about to remove him when he discovered that he was the general's interpreter.

DEHORNING OF CATTLE

Both Beef and Dairy Animals Are the Better for It.

Renders Bulls More Tractable—Caustic Potash or a Sharp Knife for Calves—The Saw or Special Shears for Older Cattle.

Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.

It is generally realized that horns on cattle are a disadvantage, and that both feeding and dairy cattle are improved by dehorning, in that they are prevented to a great extent thereafter from causing each other injury. Dehorned cattle also mingle together more quietly and annoy and disturb each other less while feeding and drinking, and as a result make better gains. Another advantage of dehorning is that in shipping fat cattle to market the danger of injuring and bruising each other is lessened and consequently reduces the waste incidental to the removal of bruised parts from the carcasses after slaughter. The economic waste and loss though bruises inflicted by horn thrusts before slaughter is much greater than is generally realized. Bruises from this cause are known to incur a wastage in some shipments of about one per cent. of the dressed carcasses, incidental to the trimming and removal of the bruised parts.

The dehorning of bulls renders them more tractable and easily managed, and removes the menace of goring and seriously injuring attendants and others. The practice of preventing horn growth in young cattle overcomes the objections of those having sentiments against the operation of dehorning adult cattle. This procedure is becoming generally popular and is being practiced to an increasing extent in calves.

Caustic Potash Treatment for Calves.

The development of horn growth can be effectively prevented in calves by the use of caustics applied to the "horn buttons or nubbins" soon after birth. To be successful the operation should be done when the calf is two or three days old and, at least, before it is a week old. Before applying the caustic it is best to clip the hair from around the little "horn buttons" on the head. The little "horn buttons" are then moistened slightly and rubbed thoroughly for a few seconds with either caustic potash or caustic soda. After a short time has been allowed for the caustic to dry, a second application is given as before. The caustic can be obtained in small white sticks, about the size of a pencil, and one end should be wrapped in paper or cloth to protect the fingers while applying it. Two or three applications of the caustic, properly done, are sufficient to destroy and prevent the horns from ever developing. The skin around the treated spots should be smeared with a little vaseline, and the calf should be protected from rain for a day or more after treatment. This is to prevent the caustic being washed off the treated spots and spreading to the surrounding skin and into the eyes.

Cutting With Knives.

When calves are allowed to go without treatment until they are several weeks old, and the "horn buttons" have developed into projecting knobs, the caustic treatment is not sufficient to entirely destroy growth, and may permit an irregular growth of horn to develop. At this age, the best method is to remove the projecting horn knobs by cutting them off at their base, close up to the head, with a sharp knife or with a pair of calf dehorners. In the case of male calves intended to be kept as bulls, many prefer to defer the dehorning operation until about the age of two or three years, or at a time when the horns are almost fully developed. The determining of the operation to this time in the case of bulls generally makes them still more tractable than if deprived of their horns while young. In the case of steers and heifers not deprived of their horns while calves, they should be dehorned before they reach the age of three years. In dehorning grown animals, it is essential that they are properly secured and restrained for the operation. For this purpose the animal to be dehorned should be securely fastened in a rack or chute or a solid stanchion, once the animal is securely fastened, the horns should be removed with as little bungling as possible.

Using Saws or Strong Shears.

For removing the horns, either a sharp meat saw or a pair of Keystone dehorning shears may be used. The dehorning shears are most commonly used, nevertheless the saw is quite satisfactory and serviceable for small numbers. The main feature is to do the operation as quickly as possible and to remove the horn close up to the head, about half an inch below the hair line, thus removing that much of the skin with the horn. If this is not done there is a likelihood of a secondary growth of irregular horn taking place, forming projecting horn stubs which are undesirable and spoil the animal's appearance. After the horns are removed, no further treatment is, as a rule, required, unless there is severe bleeding. In cases of severe bleeding, the sore can be smeared with tar and the opening packed with a piece of absorbent cotton, or with a piece of clean cheese cloth. This dressing can be allowed to remain for a day and then removed and the parts washed off with antiseptic solution, such as a two per cent. solution of creolin or lysol. With regard to the best time of the year for dehorning adult cattle, it may be done at any time other than during fly time in summer and during zero weather in the case of cattle wintering outside.—C. D. McGilvray, M.D.V., Ont. Vet. College, Guelph

Many a retired farmer, after buying a cozy bungalow in town, has decided that he wasn't as tired as he thought he was.

About Seed Corn.

In districts where corn growing is an assured success the greatest cause of low yields is poor seed. This should not be so. The use of poor seed is unprofitable and causes the loss of large sums of money each year, not only in loss of crop, but in loss of labor and use of tools in tilling acres that have but a thin or less than 100 per cent. stand of crop. With corn planted, 42 x 42, there are 3,556 hills per acre if no losses occur through headlands. Using four seeds per hill, there would be 14,224 plants if all seed grew and developed strong plants. If each plant gave an eight-ounce ear, the yield would be 104 bushels per acre. If only one plant in each hill gave an eight-ounce ear, the yield would be 26 bushels per acre. Now the work and expense of interest on investment, fertilizing the land, ploughing, planting, and cultivating would be the same for a perfect stand as for a twenty-five per cent. or a thirty-three per cent. crop. Good seed is, therefore, the first insurance, for a 100 per cent. stand in the corn field.—L. Stevenson.

Northern Farms.

Production of farm crops in the districts of Nipissing, Timiskaming, Sudbury and Algoma during the year 1922 reached a total of 4,701,998 bushels, an increase of 1,552,946 bushels over the official production of 1921. Value of the farm crops represented by the 1921 production is placed at $5,934,648.

While comparative prices are not available for the various items included in the 1922 production, the assessed area of the districts from which the yields were taken are officially given as 1,409,994 acres including 269,522 acres marsh and waste land, and 751,367 acres woodland. In 1921 the total acreage in crop in the four districts under review was 183,802, which increased during 1922 to 208,745 acres with approximately 35,000 acres additional fallow and pastures.

SNAKE IS FIGHTER

South American Reptile Attacks Man on Sight.

Bushmaster Probably the Most Feared and Worst-Tempered of the Earth's Crawling Creatures.

The worst-tempered snake in the world is the so-called bushmaster of South America, writes T. C. Bridges in the London Daily Mail. There are three sorts of bushmasters, of which the largest, called by the Indians the "surucucu," is a yellow monster reaching, when full grown, from nine to thirteen feet in length.

This creature, which is extremely plentiful in the damp forest, attacks on sight. Without the slightest warning it comes hurtling out of a thicket and drives straight at the intruder. And its bite, to a white man, means a speedy and horrible death. The Indians, however, have one herbal remedy which protects them against the effect of this poison.

Last year a man sent on a message from one ranch in Bahia to another did not arrive. Search was made and his body was discovered with a great "surucucu" wrapped round it.

The brute was killed, and then it was found that the unfortunate messenger's body was one mass of bites. There were literally scores of punctures from the poison-dealing fangs.

The "surucucu" has another peculiarity which, so far as is known, is shared by one other serpent only. This is that it is capable of making a sound, quite apart from hissing. It is described as a low whistling—a sort of "phew! phew!" If one of these creatures is hidden in a hollow tree—a favorite resting place—its presence can be detected by the sound it makes.

The smaller bushmaster is known by the Indians as the "spagnfoco." The name means "lover of fire."

Fire, instead of scaring this snake, attracts it, and by campers in wet forest the cooking fire is always extinguished before sleeping. Otherwise the man who goes to relight it in the morning will probably find one of these deadly creatures coiled in the warm embers, and possibly pay for the experience with his life.

In the swamps of Brazil and in every forest pool anacondas abound. Of these, there are three sorts.

The largest is the "dermidera," the greatest and most terrible of pythons. It is black in color, and its native name means "the snorer." This is the other snake which makes an audible sound, apart from hissing, a sound comparable with the loud snoring of a sleeping man.

One of these snakes has been killed exceeding 60 feet in length, but trails seen in the swamps seem to indicate the existence of still more monstrous specimens.

Even the smaller anacondas will attack man, and it is highly unsafe to approach a forest pool to drink without first taking due precautions. The anacondas lie in the water, with heads just above the surface, silently awaiting prey.

The Indians of inner Brazil all speak of another snake which, so far, has not been identified by the naturalist. They call it the "salamanda," and describe it as a sort of boa about 20 feet long, but of enormous thickness.

Best Extinguisher.

Mr. Budger and his wife were continually at variance regarding their individual capabilities of making and keeping a good fire. He contended that she did not know how to make a fire, or how to keep one after it was made. She, on the other hand, maintained that he never meddled with the fire that he didn't put it out—in short, that he was a regular fire damper; and, as he was always anxious to stir up things in the various fireplaces, she made it a practice of hiding the poker just before it was time for him to come into the house. One night there was an alarm of fire in the village and Budger flew for his hat and coat.

"Where are you going?" asked the wife.

"Why, there's a fire, and I'm going to help put it out."

"Well, my love," responded Mrs. Budger, "I think the best thing you can do is to take the poker with you."—Everybody's Magazine.

Our Pear-Shaped Globe.

While Dowie insisted that the earth was flat, and his successor, Voliva, sticks to the same opinion, serious scientists now begin to hark back to the theory which Columbus formulated on his third voyage, that the earth is shaped somewhat like a pear.

The eminent geologist Sollas affirms that if the earth is tending to become round, it has not yet become so. It even appears that what is today the moon belonged originally to the stem end of the terrestrial pear, which in the course of violent rotation threw off the moon.

This, says the Petit Parisien, is a theory. It is perhaps as good as any other, but anyway it is well not to get excited over it. Men were just as well off when they believed that the earth was flat and did not suspect the existence of antipodes.

Things to Boast About.

Some day when the wind is in the east, the coal supply is low, tax collectors are threatening, and the quotation on your favorite industrial stock slumps, it may be encouraging to sit down and read this set of figures compiled by a reliable authority, showing that while Canada has only five per cent. of the world's population, she produces:

90 per cent. of its cobalt.
88 per cent. of its asbestos.
85 per cent. of its nickel.
82 per cent. of its purpwood.
20 per cent. of its lumber.
20 per cent. of its cured fish.
18 per cent. of its oats.
16 per cent. of its potatoes.
12 per cent. of its silver.
11½ per cent. of its wheat.
11 per cent. of its barley.
4 per cent. of its gold.
4 per cent. of its copper.

A crowd of a million persons standing in comfort would cover seventy acres.

WILD ANIMAL LIFE in JASPER NATIONAL PARK

Famous for its ever-fascinating natural beauty, Jasper National Park has other claims to distinction. It is the largest wild animal sanctuary in the world. It is marvellously rich in plant life, its streams and lakes abound in fish, and a great variety of birds are found there. The grandeur of its mountains—there are over 100 lofty peaks in its area—the sheen of its glaciers, the glory of its woodlands and its valleys, the flashing brightness of its waters, all combine in allurement of eye and mind, not found elsewhere in Canada.

All the main animal families of this country are found in Jasper National Park. The list of them reads like a section of a work on natural history. There are the Big Horn Mountain Sheep, Mountain Goats, Wolves (black and grey), Coyotes, Foxes, Mule Deer, Moose, Caribou, Elk, Lynx, Cougars—or as many call them Mountain Lions,—Beaver, Marmots, Musk-Rats, Squirrels, Rabbits, Porcupines, Weasels, Ermines, Minks, Martens, Fishers, Otters, and Grizzly, Black and Cinnamon Bears.

Some of these have grown accustomed to mankind and accept its presence without fear. Hence black and brown, or cinnamon bears, do not hesitate to come near the lodge and the camps in search of dainties which add to the variety of the diet nature provides for them. Deer, Elk, Beaver, Rabbits and Porcupines are also frequent visitors to points where they are readily observable, or are permanent residents in places easily reached by those who do not care about hunting, but are yet interested in animal life.

With all this prodigality of wild animal life, it is assuring to know that no posonous snakes or reptiles have ever been found within Jasper Park, and that the greater part of the area is almost entirely free from mosquitos and insect pests.

The bird life of Jasper National Park is another attraction that every visitor appreciates. No less than seventy different species of birds have so far been recognized.

Outside of the Park confines there is plenty of hunting for those to whom the chase is as the wine of life. There are many trails to the areas where big game abounds, and the hunters who scorn "easy killing" may have all the thrills and excitement they desire. Experienced guides are always available for hunting and exploring parties, or for those who simply desire to wander leisurely through a never-ending succession of scenic beauties.

With its majestic mountains, Mount Edith Cavell being the highest (11,033 feet) its numerous glaciers, its beautiful stretches of woodland, valley streams and lakes, and its unrivalled wild animal life, Jasper National Park is an alluring prospect alike to the seeker for health, the searcher for recreation, the angler or the hunter of big game.

SKULL DRUMS OF TIBET.

The Trumpets Are Made From Thigh-bones.

Drums—big drums, little drums, drums made out of the tops of human skulls, over which is stretched human skin.

There are hundreds of these gruesome "instruments" making music in various parts of Tibet, writes Captain T. Howard Somervell in the London Daily Chronicle.

Tibetan music may be divided into three sections: the folk tunes, the chanting of the Lamas, and the orchestral music in the temples.

Nepali tunes, lilting and cheerful, with which our coolies—recruited almost entirely from Nepalese tribes—beguiled themselves, prepared us for something different from that eastern music which is so monotonous and uninteresting to western ears; but I confess I was astonished when I discovered that the first air I heard in Tibet offered by only one note from the first air in Stravinsky's "Sacre du Printemps."

The airs sung by the people of Tibet, and the quaint little tunes played by mendicant fiddlers on a form of violin with four strings—the bow consisting of two bands of yak hair so contrived as to sound on two strings at once—sometimes suggested the traditional music of the Scottish Highlanders.

The chanting of the Lamas is generally a monotone, varied with an occasional rise of a fifth, and sometimes, when an air is sung a second and deeper voice sustains a droning bass. But the instrumental part of the ecclesiastical music is the most interesting.

Two wind instruments are employed—a long, straight trumpet, sometimes ten feet long, and a kind of oboe; but the great feature is the "percussion." There are cymbals and gongs, and gongs and cymbals, and drums ranging in size from the diameter of a five-pound cheese to small ones made of human skulls and skin.

Skulls are not the only portion of their ancestors which these fascinating people extract melody and rhythm. Many an intriguing tune is played on a thigh-bone trumpet formed from a human thigh-bone—drilled and holed and adapted to the production of sweet sound.

Thus, while a drum of skull, mournfully and monotonously beaten, may evoke dread thoughts of mortality and perhaps from evil spirits beyond the grave, the nimble-footed lama scents a shrill invitation to the dance, although its erstwhile owner has long departed from the festive scene.

Without any desire to be flippant, one may say that an imaginative Tibetan may see in every ghost of his grandfather in the band.

Sand Is Handy.

The value of sand as a cleansing agent is apt to be overlooked by many people nowadays.

Yet its uses are manifold. For instance, when a kitchen table has been badly kept, two or three scrubbings with hot water and plenty of sand will quickly whiten it again.

For scouring floor-boards there is nothing to equal a mixture of three parts of fine sand with two parts of soft soap and one part of lime. Damp sand is the best medium for removing stains and burns on pie-dishes.

Used dry and hot, silver sand will serve to cleanse all kinds of fure, except those that are white. Rub tan hot sand into every part of the fur, then shake it out thoroughly, using a brush to remove the tex particles that remain.

Oddments of soap can be used up by dissolving them in boiling water to which a handful or two of sand has been added, and the mixture used for cleaning all kinds of stained kitchen utensils and for removing stains from the hands.

When tarring afresh the roof of a fowl-house or cycle-shed, sprinkle it well with coarse sand before the tar has time to set. This will double the "life" of the roofing material, as well as rendering it more perfectly weather-proof.

Finally, it may be mentioned that flowers will keep fresh very much longer if their stems are set in wet sand, instead of being merely immersely in water. One may also draw upon the sand-bag for filling vessels in which cuttings are put to root.

Writer Corrects Misapprehension Concerning Bachelors.

Really They Have a Better Understanding of the Childish Heart Than Have Many Parents.

I have long been convinced that the people who have no children are secretly maligned and treated with injustice by those who have, and it is for the purpose of defending them and setting them right that these lines are written. Thomas L. Masson writes in the New York Sun. There is a kind of confraternity of those who have children arrayed against those who haven't.

The thing has gone far enough. In the interests of good fellowship and all-around sport, it certainly ought to be stopped.

I frankly plead guilty myself to this sort of thing. I can recall the many occasions in which I have remarked to somebody else who had children, speaking of some one who had them not:

"You see, he doesn't understand. He has no children of his own. Great pity, isn't it?"

Yes, I have said this so often myself, and I have heard it said so often that it is now high time to record my sense of contrition. For it isn't true. The truth is that those who have no children quite generally understand them much better than those who do. They have a kind of sense about children, very much like a sixth sense, and which appears to have been given to them to take the place of the children themselves.

I could give many instances that occur to me to corroborate this view. I know two or three old bachelors who have devoted their lives to the-bringing up of boys, and the astonishing insight into boys that they have certainly could not be excelled, if paralleled, by any parent. As for maiden ladies, their perceptions about children are uncanny.

I have seen boys considered thoroughly bad and denounced and trounced by their parents, and made the most quite worthless and unendearable crawl under the wings of some spinster lady, and be immediately reclived and mentally and morally set upon their feet, merely by the fact that the spinster lady was able to look into their hearts and to have such faith in them as to accomplish this miracle.

For this is the real miracle after all—that one may touch a human being, perhaps only by the pressure of the hand or an understanding smile and a listening ear, and immediately restore him to moral health.

I am free to confess that there are so many things about those who have no children that indicate their superiority to those who have that I find it difficult to know where to begin. They may be put in every other way, owing to their freedom from responsibilities of this sort, and joyousness the heart of the crusty, in their ways and cranks, and all that sort of thing. It is nothing less than marvelous the way they will let children upset them.

I have seen an elderly gentleman so bad lived in bachelor apartments all his life, and who, if his newspaper was eighteen minutes late, or was folded the wrong way, would fall into a profound rage. I have seen this gentleman submit to any indignity imposed upon him by a small band of children at a week-end—and cry for more.

Thus, you see, there are two sorts of miracles; there is the miracle of the childless person understanding and seeing into the child's heart when the parent is blind, and there is the miracle of the child bringing back to responsiveness and joyousness the heart of the crusty, childless person, who has become immersed in the machinery of his own selfishness.

Then, again, have you noticed that childless persons love all kinds of children? Their impartiality is as wide as the world. A nice little girl with flaxen hair blowing back of her as she runs in the wind, and who sits on one's knee in the twilight and asks for a fairy story—such a divine creature as this will appeal to any childless person, no matter who she is or where she comes from.

But the average parent sniffs at any other little girl like that who doesn't belong to him. The prejudice and intolerance of parents have never been measured!

Mass of Camels.

The mass of Feisal's army filled the valley from side to side. There were hundreds of brushwood fires burning, with Arabs round them making coffee, or eating, or sleeping like dead men muffled in their cloaks; and on and off they could in the confusion of camels. I had never imagined so many camels together, and the mess was indescribable, as they were couched or tied up here and there all over the camping ground, and more were always coming in, and the old ones leaping up on three legs to join them, roaring with hunger and agitation. Patrols were going out, and others coming in, loaded, and some dozen of Egyptian mules were bucking angrily all over the middle of the scene.—World's Work.

Reconsidered.

Phillippi—You know, I fell in love with Dick Huggins at first sight.

Perdita—When is your engagement to be announced?

Phillippi—Never. I took a second look.

The Dorotheum.

The Dorotheum, known more familiarly as "Aunt Dorothy," is a state-owned pawnshop and auctioneer room in Vienna, where a person can buy, sell or pawn almost anything. All classes use the Dorotheum, and at present when every one in Vienna is poor, and there are many visitors from abroad, the business is velvet as far as being brisk.

What He Learnt.

Willie Arbuthnot returned home after his first day at school.

His father asked the young scholar what he had learned.

"I learned to say 'Yes, ma'am,' and 'No, sir' to me mither and feyther," replied the boy.

"Did you indeed?" said his father.

"Aye!" responded Willie.

BY AUTO ON THE GULF OF GEORGIA

WHO has not heard of the thousand isles of the Gulf of Georgia? This Gulf is a ramification of the great strait of Juan de Fuca famed in legend and history, through which the Spanish navigators sailed hundreds of years ago, and which is now one of the important trade routes of the world. It separates Vancouver Island from the mainland of British Columbia and the State of Washington, and is one of the most beautiful waterways known to man.

The city of Victoria, at the extreme south end of Vancouver Island, has excellent ferry lines connecting it with the mainland, but as the steamship services in the past have proved inadequate for the large crowds of summer visitors and motor tourists, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has put into service a fast-going steamer which operates twice daily between Victoria and Bellingham, Washington. The ferry is an important addition to the Canadian Pacific fleet and its name, "Motor Princess," is appropriate in that it is the first vessel of the company, operating on the Pacific, to be equipped with internal combustion engines. These engines give the boat a speed of about fourteen knots. On the deck of the steamer is parking space for fifty automobiles, and there is well appointed accommodation for two hundred and fifty passengers, saloon, restaurant, smoking room and deck spaces for promenading.

The route travelled by the ferry is marked by islands, some of them many miles in extent, others gemlike little islets which make the waterway a succession of magnificent pictures. The traveller is further entranced by the magnificent view of Mount Baker standing garbed in its everlasting mantle of snow among its satellites the foothills. This lordly mountain is on the mainland near Bellingham, and, beautiful and inspiring, it is seen at its best when travelling to or from Victoria.

Tells Women How She Was Restored to Perfect Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Winnipeg, Man.—"I cannot speak too highly of what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I was a nervous wreck and I just had to force myself to do my work. Even the sound of my own children playing made me feel as if I must scream if they did not get away from me. I could not even speak right to my husband. The doctor said he could do nothing for me. My husband's mother advised me to take the Vegetable Compound and I started it at once. I was able to do my work once more and it was a pleasure, not a burden. Now I have a fine bouncing baby and am able to nurse it and enjoy doing my work. I cannot help recommending such a medicine, and any one seeing me before I took it, and seeing me now, can see what it does for me. I am only too pleased for you to use my testimonial."—Mrs. EMILY DAVIS, 721 McGee Street, Winnipeg, Man.

SARA THOMPSON,

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Card, Adelphi street, on Wednesday afternoon, April 25th, when their eldest daughter, Alice L. was united in marriage to Archie D. Thompson, only son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Thompson, Deseronto Road. The marriage ceremony was conducted by Rev. A. J. Terrill.

The Napanee Golf Club have secured the services of Mr. H. Robinson as Professional for the coming season. Mr. Robinson, who is a pupil of the well-known Professional Percy Barrett, late of Lambton and Weston Clubs, won the tournament for Professional Assistants in 1922 and comes well recommended. He will be ready to give lessons to members of the Club commencing Monday next, May 7th. Mr. Robinson will alternate between the Napanee and Picton Clubs during the coming season, spending half a month at each club.

A very quiet wedding was solmnized at Grace Methodist Church parsonage on Saturday morning, when Marion Georgina, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Coulter, Palace Road, was united in marriage to Arthur Clifton Rooks, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Rook, Slash Roads. The ceremony was performed by Rev. A. J. Terrill, and the young couple were attended by Miss Evelyn Coulter, sister of the bride and Mr. Harry Pringle, the young couple left for Watertown and other points in the United States, and on their return will reside at the groom's home near Napanee.

Charles Stover, a well-known retired farmer living at Wilton, died very suddenly on Monday evening of last week. It appears that Mr. Stover was in his usual good health during the day. In the evening he went to the creek to catch some fish as he was very fond of fishing. He caught a mess and was on his way home when he was seized with a weak spell. He called a passer-by, and Mrs. Stover and some of the neighbors came to his assistance, but he only lived a very short time. Heart trouble gave as the cause of his death. The late Mr. Stover was about sixty-one years of age, and had lived in Wilton for thirty-five years. Deceased was born at Ernestown and for many years served as secretary-treasurer of the Chippewa Friends. He is survived by his wife, one son, Archie, on the homestead ; one daughter, Mrs. George Emberley, Wilton, one brother, Peter Stover, Toronto, and one sister, Mrs. Irvin Glass, living near Napanee.

Appreciation.

The members of the Napanee Fire Brigade wish to publicly thank Mr. Geo. Tustin for his liberality in giving them a two nights' benefit at Wonderland, on Monday and Tuesday nights of last week. They are also deeply indebted to Black's orchestra and Walters' orchestra for excellent music rendered, which was given without any charge ; and the firemen also appreciate the liberal support of the citizens. The excellent fire picture, "The Third Alarm," was witnessed by two crowded houses.

A "Want Adv." in The Napanee Express will bring results. Try it.

The head of the house came downstairs in an irate frame of mind and told his wife that Bobbie had taken some change from his pockets.

"I don't think it is fair of you to accuse Bobbie that way, Jack. Why, you might as well say I'd taken it !"

"Oh, no my dear," the brute answered, "it wasn't all taken you know !"

THE BIG IDEA

The big idea in our business of Men's Clothes selling is to think more about what we give to the man who buys our clothes than we think about what he gives us.

That may sound like talk ; an "awfully good" attitude. Not a bit of it. It's the greatest business-building idea we know of.

To see how much real value can be put in clothes ; to give more and more attention to style ; to be sure of high quality in fabrics and tailoring ; to sell at as low a price as possible ;—these things are the big idea.

Quality, Service, Value.
